LEI Growth Supportive of Multiple Fed Rate Hikes in 2018

Today's 0.3 percent increase in the Leading Economic Index (LEI) for March follows a 0.7 percent increase in February and a 0.8 percent increase in January. The index suggests continued economic growth through 2018.

Up, Up and Up

- The LEI continued its upward ascent in March, reaching a series high of 109.0. The index has not posted a negative month-over-month reading since May 2016.
- The interest rate spread and ISM new orders were the greatest contributors to the headline figure, adding 0.15 and 0.13 percentage points, respectively. Recently, there has been an encouraging balance of strength among the hard and soft data.

Labor Market Bears Watching

- The components related to the labor market, initial jobless claims and manufacturing hours worked, shaved off 0.05 and 0.07 percentage points, respectively. This pullback comes on the heels of an encouraging February in which these components were the greatest buoys to the index.
- The weakness in the labor indicators does not come as much of a surprise given March's underwhelming nonfarm payroll report.
